Read the following Passage carefully, then answer the questions that follows:

When the Spellman family moved next door to us, my mother believed God sent them to test her good nature. Our block was pretty quiet until the Spellmans came. There were some senior citizens, Mr. Tatum the librarian, and us, the Middleton family. We didn't live like the Spellman family. We kept our grass cut and turned off our lights at 9PM. The Spellmans had a different lifestyle.

The first thing that you must know is that there were sixteen of them, all different ages from twin babies to grown men. The Spellmans had loud personalities, and sixteen loud personalities is a lot of volume. They played loud music all day and night, had crowds of noisy guests coming and going, and every one of them must have owned a bike that they kept resting in the front yard.

Living next to the Spellmans almost drove my mother insane. If she wasn't shaming them for not attending gatherings, or complaining to her sister Jackie about the way they dressed, then she was shoeing the Spellman's dogs out of our yard or filing noise complaints with the police. My mother had never been so busy. She was even organising a "good neighbours" committee to discuss ways to improve the neighborhood. All she ever spoke of any more were the Spellmans and their wrongdoings.

One Sunday afternoon, my mother was driving old Ms. Parker home to her house on the hill when we got a flat tire. My father was out of town at the time, so it was just me, my mother, and old Ms. Parker. All of us together couldn't get the spare tire out of the trunk. Since old Ms. Parker lived so far up that hill, not a lot of traffic drove by us. We heard the rattling of an old pick up truck as it pulled over to assist us.

The Spellman boys ran up on our car. Before my mother could even protest, they had accompanied us out of the car, thrown the car on a jack, and took the tire off. "Her spare is flat," said the middle one. "Give her ours," replied the big one. The Spellman boys whizzed around the car. My mother was stunned. "I don't know what to say," she stammered. The big one said that God encouraged us to love our neighbours. After that my mother started acting like a neighbour.
