VI- Reading Comprehension: (30 Marks)

Read the following passage carefully, then answer the questions below:

The wonders of the world below the sea were almost unknown. The main problem, of course, was air. How could air be supplied to swimmers below the surface of the sea? A long time ago in Asia, pictures showed men swimming under the surface with air bags tied to their bodies. A pipe from the bag carried air into the swimmer's mouth. Later on, Da Vinci designed a complete diving suit.

In 1680, an Italian professor invented a large air bag with a glass window to be worn over the diver's head. To clean the air, a breathing pipe went from the air bag, through another bag to remove moisture, and then again to the large air bag. The plan did not work, but it gave later inventors the idea of moving air around in diving devices.

In 1819, a German, Augustus Siebe, developed a way of forcing air into the head-covering by a machine operated above the water. In 1837 he invented the 'hard-hat suit', which was to be used for almost a century. It had a metal covering for the head and an air pipe attached to a machine above water. It also had small openings to remove unwanted air. But there were two dangers to the diver inside the hard-hat suit. One was a sudden rise to the surface, caused by too great a supply of air. The other was the crushing of the body, caused by a sudden dive into deep water.

Gradually, the hard-hat suit was improved so that the diver could be given a regular supply of breathable air. The diver could then move around under the ocean without worrying about his air supply.

During the 1940's, diving underwater without a special suit became popular. Divers used a breathing device and a face-mask. To increase the swimmers' speed, rubber shoes shaped like giant duck feet called flippers were used. The manufacture of snorkels, which are rubber breathing pipes, made it possible for the divers to float on the surface of the water, observing the marine life below them. A special rubber suit which prevented heat loss made diving comfortable enough to collect samples of plant and vegetable life.

The invention of scuba was the most important thing because it makes it possible for a diver to work 200 feet underwater or even deeper for several hours. So, scientists can now move around freely at great depths, learning about the wonders of the sea.

VII - Summary Making (8 Marks)

Read the following passage then do as required:

Sea turtles are one of the oldest species to inhabit planet Earth. They have been living in the ocean since the time of the dinosaurs. Unfortunately, sea turtles face many dangers, especially from humans. People destroy their habitats to build hotels and houses on the beach. This makes it difficult for mother turtles to find safe places to lay their eggs in the sand. Thousands of sea turtles are killed by speedboat users and fishermen nets each year. In some areas of the world, sea turtles are intensively hunted for their meat and shells. Throwing plastic bags in the ocean also hurts sea turtles. Sea turtles get very sick or sometimes die when they eat this kind of trash.

In a paragraph of FOUR sentences ONLY, summarise and paraphrase the previous passage in answer to the following question:

Why are humans a danger to sea turtles?
