The examiner, Mr. Smith had asked me to drive in heavy traffic across Paris. However, I felt I did quite well this time. Mr. Smith then instructed me to drive out of the city.

Mr. Smith seemed satisfied with my driving, and with a smile, he said, "Just one more thing, Mr. Cooper, let us suppose that an animal or a child unexpectedly crosses the road in front of you. When I tap on the window, I want you to stop the car instantly."

I continued driving the car along the road. After a while, Mr. Smith tapped on the window again. Though the sign was very clear, I didn't get it right, so it took me so long to react. I suddenly hit the brake pedal so hard that we were both thrown forward onto the windscreen. There was the examiner, with a bleeding nose, who looked at me sadly and said in a miserable voice, "Mr. Cooper you have just killed a dog!"
