In 2006, Kevin, Ray, and Charlie decided to do something very challenging. They made the decision to run across the Sahara Desert- 6,920 km. It seemed impossible to do, but they wanted to try. The three men liked to test themselves, and this would be a very big test.

On the morning of November 2, Kevin, Ray, and Charlie started their trip across the Sahara. Every morning they began running at 5:00. At 11 a.m. they stopped and rested until 5 p.m. Then they ran again until 9:30 in the evening. Each day they ran about 64 km. Every day it was the same thing. They got up and ran. They listened to music on their iPods, and they ran and ran.

The three men had some problems on their trip, and many times they wanted to quit and go home. It was often very hot (60°C) during the day, and the heat made them sick. Their legs and feet hurt. Sometimes it was so windy that they couldn't see. One time they got lost. But they didn't quit. After 111 days, they successfully finished their trip across the Sahara Desert. B. Reading Comprehension (16 Marks)

Water is the most important source of life on Earth. We can't live without it. Without water we would die of thirst. Water does not merely help us to survive, but it is significant for the day-to-day functioning of all life forms that exist on earth.

Water is frozen and forms ice caps at the North and South poles because it's very cold there. Then, it turns back to be fresh water when it melts in summer. Water goes round in a process called the water cycle. Clouds in the sky contain water in the form of a gas called water vapour. This gas becomes liquid and falls to Earth as rain or snow. The rain brings water to seas, rivers, and lakes. Water also goes into the soil then roots of plants take it in.

You need water to stay alive. You can stay for more than a week without food, but if you stay without water for more than seven days, you may die. Surely, the lack of sufficient water or the use of contaminated water can cause serious health problems for humans. Therefore, the amount and quality of water which we consume is essential for our physical health plus fitness.

While water is quite essential and, yet, so scarce, people fail to realize this fact. They waste water with little or no care for the results of this activity. It is a must to use water carefully. We should also use water wisely so that we can get enough of it left for our future life.
