Read the following passage, then answer the questions that follow:

People start new businesses for different reasons. Sometimes they have a great idea. Other times, they decide to make a living by doing something they enjoy. For Eli Reich, his business began when someone stole his bike bag.

Reich was an engineer. Because he cared about the environment, he biked to work every day. He carried his laptop in a bike bag. When someone stole his bag, he tried to buy a new one, but he could not. So, he decided to make his own by using the inner tubes of his bike. Inner tubes are the inside part of a bike tire. They are soft, flexible, and feel like leather. They are also waterproof. All these are good qualities of a bag.

His friends loved his new bag. Soon, many wanted to have one. Reich left his job and started his own business called Alchemy Goods. At first, he depended on his friends for inner tubes. But business was good, and he quickly ran short of these tubes. He needed a new material. So, he asked local bike stores to send him used inner tubes instead of throwing them away. So far, he used over 300, 000 inner tubes.

Each bag uses as many recycled products as possible. The straps, for example, are old car seatbelts. Reich's goal is to use 100 percent recycled materials. This is not easy. It's hard to make a product that is endlessly recycled. He wants to let his customers know about his goal, so each bag has a number above the company logo which gives the percentage of recycled materials in that particular bag.

Reich emphasizes that he uses recycled materials, but he creates high quality products. Recycling turns waste into reusable things that are often cheaper than the original product. Recycling transforms waste into a better quality and a more expensive product than the original product. Alchemy Goods bags are not cheap. Each bag is handmade. Using recycled materials keeps the cost down. Creating a business out of other people's trash creates more job opportunities. Business owners are taking advantage of tons of trash that Americans throw away every year.
